WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

This weekend's storm continues to bring snow to the Sierra this morning but should move out of our region this afternoon. A second system moves into Northern California late tonight into Monday with drier conditions on Tuesday.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Showers along with cool weather and areas of strong winds will occur today as the second wave of a low pressure trough moves through the region. The precipitation will end this evening and winds will diminish overnight tonight. Partly cloudy cool conditions will prevail Monday, then a weaker disturbance will bring a few showers mainly to San Diego County Monday night. Fair cool weather with weak to moderate offshore flow will prevail Tuesday and Wednesday. A low pressure system will move south into the southwestern United States by Friday and could bring light precipitation but will more likely bring moderate to strong offshore flow. Warmer weather could finally return next weekend.
